

WRITING A REVIEW :

SCOPING, SYSTEMATIC

OR OVERVIEW?

22 November 2018 | 8.30 AM - 4.00 PM
Seminar Room, MyAgeing

By Dr. Hibatullah Romli

Dr. Hibatullah is currently a senior lecturer at Department of Nursing, Faculty of Medicine and Health Science, UPM. He was a reviewer in Malaysian Journal of Public Health Medicine and he has published articles related to systematic review.

INTRODUCTION

It is estimated that almost one hundred clinical trials are made available every day. With the a bundance of primary researches available – combined with constrains of time, review articles are beneficial and helpful to summarize and provide insight on the current evidence for practice. Reviews can be found at the lower level up to the highest level in the hierarchy of evidence. Thus reviews can serve for a foundation to develop further research or to serve for the development of standard of practice guideline. However, to develop a good quality review article is a challenge.
